DOWN AND DIRTY

Burt didn't necessarily dislike cops, but he felt a lot better when they weren't around.

Tires crunched gravel as Burt chewed the first bite of his sausage biscuit, shattering what he had hoped to be a peaceful breakfast. Never fails, he thought, grumbling irritably at the intrusion. He got up from a worktable cluttered with the greasy guts of a push mower engine and peered through the dirty window of his caretaker's shack.

"Shit," he muttered.

Sheriff Franks, his eyes concealed behind mirrored sunglasses, climbed out of his cruiser.

There was a time in Burt's life when such a visit would have made him shit his pants. Thankfully, those days were over. Eight months at the penal farm had convinced him to change his ways. Now Burt was sober and gainfully employed and intent on staying that way. Still, the unannounced visit made him a tad uneasy. Burt didn't necessarily dislike cops, but he felt a lot better when they weren't around. Also, he resided in the shack and wasn't exactly proud of his squalid living conditions.

Burt didn't wait for a knock before opening the door.

"Sheriff . . ."

"Burt."

They exchanged a brief handshake. Franks' hand was big, his grip strong. Standing there just outside the door in his crisply laundered uniform, his gold badge polished to a high sheen, the brim of his hat low, he removed his sunglasses and asked Burt if he could have a moment of his time. This was a first. No lawman had ever sought Burt's permission for anything.

"Sure, Sheriff. Come on in."

Franks grabbed a straight-backed chair, turned it around, and straddled the thing. He placed his forearms atop the backrest, looking like every TV cop who ever grilled a suspect. Burt returned to his stool at the worktable. The sheriff saw the biscuit beside the Guthrie Gazette and apologized for interrupting Burt's breakfast. Another first, Burt thought. Hell, he was starting to actually like this guy. But his opinion changed during the course of their conversation, especially when Franks dispensed with the bullshit and got around to articulating the purpose of his call.

"I realize it's a lot of work," Franks said after he had laid out his plan, "but I think it'll be worth it. We really need to catch this guy . . ."

Correction, Burt thought. You need to catch him.

It was an election year. Otherwise, Franks wouldn't have been so gung-ho about snaring some creep who hadn't struck in a year's time. Granted, graverobbing was a serious crime. Not as serious as armed robbery or murder but still pretty damned bad. And disgusting. Burt was suddenly glad that he had eaten only one bite of his biscuit.

"I already talked to Edward," Franks said. "He gave me the green light, but I wanted to hash it out with you personally."

Edward Snodgrass, Burt's boss, owned the funeral home adjoining the cemetery. If he had okayed this thing with the sheriff then Burt didn't have a choice, not if he wanted to keep his job. Still, he appreciated Franks coming to talk to him like a real human being.

"No problem, Sheriff," he said. "Consider it done."

Burt waited until he heard Franks drive away before resuming his breakfast. He took two bites and realized he wasn't hungry anymore. You had to be a really sick fucker to steal corpses. And why only one night a year? The occasion must've had some significance for the culprit. Then again, maybe not.

Crime always spiked on Halloween.

Unlit cigarette jutting from his mouth, a cup of lukewarm coffee beside his laptop, Raymond Carney belted out what had to be the most interesting article of his journalistic career. The reason for this was simple. The article wasn't really an article at all. It was fiction. And that's what Raymond aspired to be. A fiction writer.

Working for a smalltown rag like the Guthrie Gazette paid the bills, sure, but he hated every minute of it. Writing about some old biddy's prize-winning toma-roam free.

Raymond had known something was up as soon as he had arrived at the office to find his editor and Sheriff Franks engaged in what appeared to be a serious discussion. His suspicions were confirmed when the sheriff had left, and Mr. Osmond had walked over to his desk and given him the assignment. Raymond had thought he was joking. And toes and/or the Guthrie Tigers first winning season in over a decade wasn't exactly what he had had in mind when studying English in college. It was, however, a waste of his talent.

Still, lots of great authors had gotten their starts as lowly cub reporters. Raymond hoped to add his name to the list. But that was years, perhaps decades, away. Now all he wanted to do was finish writing this fake obituary for a fake funeral. It was nice to be creative for a change, nice to discard the facts and let his mind with good reason. The story his boss had told him was pretty far out.

Some nut robbing graves at Pleasant Hill Cemetery. Two Halloweens in a row. Would there be a third? Not if the sheriff had something to say about it. His elaborate sting operation was something right out of a movie. Lure the freak with a fake obit, dupe him further with a fake funeral, then catch the bastard in the act.

His creative juices flowing, Raymond wrote a humdinger of an obit. Then he went outside and fired up that cigarette, his reward for a job well done.

-3-

Burt, properly snookered and feeling no pain, had just turned out the lights when he thought he heard something outside. Laughter? Surely not, he thought. Must be the whiskey. He had downed bumpkin lawman. Burt hoped the plan worked. If it didn't—well, all his hard work would have been for nothing.

But it was more than just that. He was curious, too. Burt couldn't wait to lay eyes on this fellow, this deranged robber of graves who had struck the last two Halloweenes. Hell, it might even be a woman.

Burt had almost drifted back to would just have to do; it was a hell of a lot better than nothing.

And totally unnecessary, Burt realized when he saw the orange glow of a cigarette near the freshly dug hole. Make that a joint, he thought as the unmistakable aroma of pot reached his nose. Not wanting to alert the stoners to his presence, Burt turned off his flashlight and dropped it into a deep pocket.

The young couple sat on the ground, their backs pressed to the trunk of a large Cypress tree. Peering from behind a large tombstone, Burt recognized the local reporter. The girl looked a few years younger than Ramond Carney, probably a student at Guthrie College. She was a looker, a bewitching brunette wearing all black. One of those freaky Goth types, Burt thought. Good for Raymond. She was probably dynamite a pint of Early Times; this after spending his afternoon on a backhoe digging that hole for Sheriff Franks. Mr. Snodgrass had already shown him the casket—base model, of course—that would be lowered first thing in the morning in preparations for the graveside service at noon.

Having a funeral on Halloween seemed a double dose of morbidity to Burt. Then again, it wasn't really a funeral. It was, however, a damn clever idea. Burt had to hand it to Franks. The sheriff was certainly no country sleep when he heard the sound again. This time he rose from his narrow cot. He padded across the floor and peered through the window. Nothing. Still, he felt it best to investigate. He put on his dirty overalls, grabbed a shovel just in case, and stepped outside.

Pleasant Hill Cemetery was an eerie place at night. Burt waved his flashlight over moss draped trees and pale tombstones. The shovel rested on his shoulder. He would have felt a lot safer with a gun. As an ex-felon he wasn't allowed to carry one. The shovel in the sack. Down for anything. Wild and kinky as fuck.

"Congratulations on winning one of the five parts," Raymond said to his girlfriend after they had finished the joint. "You're gonna' knock 'em dead."

"All thanks to the sheriff. Crazy, huh?"

"I love your costume. The black veil is a perfect touch."

"Do you really think he'll come tomorrow?"

"The graverobber?"

"Yeah."

"The sheriff seems to think so."

Burt watched with mounting excitement as the young couple stopped talking and started making out. Ray got her top off. Moonlight lashed a spectacular set of tits. Both of her nipples were pierced. She got Ray's pants off. No sooner had she done this than her head bobbed in his lap, up and down, faster and faster.

Having primed him good and proper, she rose from the ground and leaned against the tree. Ray stood and lifted the hem of her black miniskirt. Burt couldn't believe his eyes. The chick was wearing black crotchless panties! Ray grabbed her ass with both hands and lifted her from the ground, banging her none too gently against the Cypress tree.

Ray's white ass pumped between her creamy thighs. Lucky bastard, Burt thought. He unshouldered his overalls, letting them fall from his wiry frame. His cock was a huge thing, a monstrous thing throbbing with a life of its own. He spat in his palm and stroked himself, moving his hand up and down.

Burt frowned when Ray pulled out, thinking the show was about to end. Thankfully, he had thought wrong. His frown was supplanted by a lewd grin when Ms. Crotchless Panties walked to the edge of the gaping hole.

"Let's fuck in the grave," she said to Ray.

Ray chuckled. "You are a dirty bitch."

They climbed into the hole together, disappearing before Burt's wide eyes. He waited a few moments, allowing them time to get situated before creeping ever so stealthily to the hole he had created that very afternoon. Lying on his stomach, he chanced a peek over the precipice. Ray's Goth slut rode him hard, pogoing on his rigid pole way down there at the bottom of the pit. Burt watched with fascination as she used her hands blowing a wad onto the mounds of fresh clay surrounding the hole. The party was over. For him, at least. He backed away from the hole and pulled up his overalls. Then he got the hell out of there, stopping briefly to retrieve the shovel before returning to his shack.

Sheriff Franks' plan worked to perfection. The graverobber—some whacko occultist from a neighboring town—was apprehended late Halloween night.

like miniature spades, scooping dirt so that she could dump it over her head.

Dirt rained down her shoulders, neck, tits, eventually finding its way to her thighs, then Ray who held her trim waist with both hands. Dark clumps contrasted alluringly with her pale flesh. Burt had never seen anything like it. Not even in a movie.

He turned on his side and tugged himself to completion,

Franks and his deputy surprised the guy, dropping from a treetop and pouncing on him before he had a chance to dig more than three shovelfuls of dirt.

Burt was proud to have been a part of the operation, which added a whole new dimension to his caretaker's job. These days, he can't even prepare a grave without getting a massive boner from thinking of Ray's down and dirty Goth girlfriend!

Letters that should or shouldn't have been written, but you sent them to us anyway!

SAUSAGE PARTY

I had been dreading it ever since my wife booked the flight to Wisconsin where it would be colder than a witch's tit in December. Leaving the sunny climes of Florida for a bone-chilling mid-western winter wasn't exactly my idea of a happy holiday.

But what was a husband to do? We had spent last Christmas with my folks in East Texas. Now it was Bonnie's turn to enjoy some quality time with her parents. Fair is fair. Still, I wasn't happy about it.

I sulked the entire flight, running our stewardess ragged by drowning my sorrows with scotch and soda. Needless to say, I wasn't feeling any pain when the plane touched down in Green Bay.

"You need to sober up," Bonnie told me as we waited for our bags at the luggage carousel. "I can't have you showing up at my parents' house drunker than a skunk."

"I'm not that drunk."

"Says you."

"Relax, honey. I'm fine."

Bonnie pressed the issue. No sooner had we loaded our bags on a wheeled cart than she led me to the nearest coffee kiosk and ordered a large cup of medium roast. The coffee was strong but paled in comparison to the wicked wind which lashed my face as we stepped outside to hail a cab.

"Brrrrrrrr," Bonnie said.

"This sucks," I muttered.

"Too much cream?"

"I'm not talking about the coffee."

After exchanging gifts on Christmas morning Bonnie and I went our separate ways. She helped her mother with dinner in the kitchen while I remained in the den and watched football with her father. He was a big fan. Me, not so much. I couldn't wait to get my ass back to Florida and play some golf.

My father-in-law made a comfortable living in the sausage business. Upper management. On our last day in Green Bay Bonnie begged me to go to the factory. "They give these great tours," she explained. "It'll be fun." I didn't want to see how the sausage was made. Lips and assholes. I'd never eat the stuff again. And I liked sausage. But Bonnie wouldn't take no for an answer; she badgered me until I gave in.

The tour guide led our small group through the labyrinthine facility, stopping at various points to explain the ins and outs of the sausage making process.

I was bored out of my skull.

Until Bonnie grabbed my arm and led me to an isolated nook behind a huge industrial vat. "What gives, Bonnie? We're missing the tour."

"Fuck the tour," she said. "All this sausage is making me horny as hell."

I chuckled. But she was dead serious.

"Come on, baby," Bonnie told me. "Whip out that big fat kielbasa . . ."

Touring the sausage factory suddenly seemed like the best idea in the world!

I dropped my pants. Bonnie knelt and took me in her mouth. Her wet lips wrapped around my hard cock, she jerked her head to and fro with frenzied abandon. The tour guide's voice faded as he led the group deep into the bowels of the factory. Machinery hummed.

My slutty wife sucked me sloppily, moaning and slobbering while satisfying her desperate craving for tubular meat.

Bonnie surprised me yet again when she withdrew her mouth and told me to fuck her. I had expected her to finish me with her mouth. But no. She wanted the whole shebang. And I did too . . .

Having lifted Bonnie's corduroy miniskirt above her hips, I peeled her leggings and panties to the top of her black riding boots. Then I skewered her from behind, plunging my cock into her hot crevice. She was bent over a waist-high railing, her kitty framed perfectly for a thorough pounding. I banged her with a series of stiff jabs, making her ass jiggle. The humming machinery melded with the clapping of our fevered flesh.

We hadn't had sex since leaving Florida. My balls were brimming with sauce. Not yet, I told myself. I concentrated mightily to avoid coming too soon. Bonnie was oh so close to having an explosive orgasm, and I was determined to make her pussy come.

I drove my hips harder and faster, drilling my wife's snatch with everything I had. It was enough to make her climax. She cried out seconds before I pulled out and dumped my massive load on her sweet ass.

We rejoined the group shortly before the tour ended. Nobody even knew we were gone. Everybody received a complimentary box of sausage. Well, everybody but Bonnie. She politely declined, telling the tour guide that she was a vegetarian.

Which was true, much more than less.

The only meat my wife ate was mine!

Bonnie knelt and took me in her mouth. Her wet lips wrapped around my hard cock, she jerked her head to and fro with frenzied abandon.

We couldn't wait for this sizzling blonde beauty to strip down and reveal her perfect firm breasts and perfect pussy. Anette took a dip in the pool while we waited for the crew to set up, but she is so hot, the waters didn't have a chance to cool her down. She got out... and needless to say... it took the crew a couple hours to set up.
